Easier Navigation and Reorganized Content
Make It User-friendly for All Audiences

RICHMOND, VA – Today the Virginia Housing Development Authority (VHDA) announced the launch of its redesigned website. The new vhda.com is now more user-friendly, with an enhanced search tool, quick links to popular pages and content organized by customer group—homebuyers, homeowners, renters and business partners.

For example, on the new Business Partners page, visitors will find links to information specifically for single family lenders and real estate agents, as well as for property owners and managers, Housing Choice Voucher agents, multifamily developers and government and non-profit organizations.

“There are a number of reasons I’m excited about our reinvented Web site,” said VHDA Executive Director Susan F. Dewey. “We now have the ability to keep Virginians easily updated on VHDA activity with announcements and breaking news prominently displayed on our new home page. We’ve also added a Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ) page for each of our audiences, and the site is much more accessible.

New Features

So whether it's a first-time homebuyer with questions concerning mortgage loans, a landlord with questions about fair market rents or a developer with questions about Low-Income Housing Tax Credits, finding answers should be quick and easy."

For questions not covered by the new FAQ pages, contact information for the relevant department on each page of the site makes it simple to know exactly who to contact at VHDA for answers.

"All of us at VHDA are very proud of the new vhda.com," Dewey said. "We're looking forward to discovering all the possibilities that come with our redesigned site, and hope that our customers and stakeholders will want to discover its possibilities too."
